AKRON, OH (PRWEB) April 15, 2014 -- Akron Alcohol Drug Rehab is launching a new residential treatment program focused on drug addiction and its side effects in Akron.

Residential treatment involves detoxification and inpatient programs. These are all designed to work in tandem so a person can fully heal from drugs' destructive path. Drugs like methamphetamines, cocaine, heroin, and Ecstasy have the ability to become addictive and help a once-sane person become out of control.

Individuals that truly desire to stop their drug use will understand how important getting a grasp on what causes addiction can do to their healing process. Staff members, including therapists, counselors and an experienced medical team, at the Akron center will be able to present causes and conditions around the horrors of drug addiction.

The Akron residential treatment program's bottom line is to help all clients leave with a structure in place for life. People enter treatment seeking a new life or relief from pain. Entering the facility gives clients a new chance to be responsible members of society once again. They come to find themselves, discover new levels of self-esteem, and a spirituality that works. Adults and adolescents come to see this as a process, one that is not over in a matter of days. The residential treatment program helps people rebuild their lives from the inside out.

Once people leave the treatment center, outpatient care and support is strongly suggested by counselors. Transitioning back into the "real world" takes time, too, and outpatient treatment allows clients an opportunity to share their victories and struggles with like-minded people. When it's all put together, from detoxification to outpatient care, the substance abuse treatment center gives people a second chance.
